The deeper root cause of the crises we face is modern humanity's delusional sense of self. Our sense of self is integral to our behavior and the way we decide to build our lives. It is reflected in our institutions, our social values and our power structures. If we do not know ourselves as intimately connected to the web of life, why would we bother preserving its splendor, diversity and bounty?

A Wholoistic Self is connected to the entire whole. Acting in our self-interest involves making decisions that protect the rivers, atmosphere, soil and forests that provide the hydrogen, oxygen and minerals that make up the physical elements of what we know as 'I'.

Redefining the boundaries of the self will make charging others for the gifts that you have to offer obsolete.

When our boundaries of the self are confined and when bound and caged we cannot act in rational self-interest.
